BECOMING REQUIRES COURAGE.

SUNDAY SESSION· THEME: THE COURAGE TO BECOME

THE COURAGE TO BECOME

with Immanuelson Sam

WHAT WOULD YOU DO IF FEAR WEREN’T DECIDING?

Don’t just live. Become.

CENTRAL MESSAGE

You cannot become the person you are meant to be while allowing fear to dictate the decisions you make.

What we'll walk away with Recognize.

How fear can prevent personal growth and meaningful action.

Identify.

The fears that may be holding you back from becoming a better version of yourself.

Understand.

That courage is not the absence of fear, but the decision to act despite it.

Commit.

To one courageous action to take during the coming week.

Welcome, Becomers.

Over the past two weeks, we have examined the beliefs, experiences and patterns that shaped who we are today.

But today, we must confront something that often stands between the person we are and the person we desire to become:

FEAR.

Have you ever known what you needed to do but failed to do it because you were afraid?

Have you ever had an idea but refused to pursue it because you were afraid of failing?

Have you ever remained in a situation you had outgrown because uncertainty frightened you?

If your answer is yes, you are not alone.

How much of our potential are we sacrificing to protect ourselves from fear?

It is one thing to recognize the person you want to become.

It is another thing entirely to have the courage to take the steps that will get you there.

Fear can keep you comfortable — but prevent you from growing.

Fear is a natural human response. It can protect us from genuine danger — but it can also cause us to avoid opportunities, difficult conversations, necessary changes, and unfamiliar experiences.

Sometimes, we are not stuck because we lack ability.

We are stuck because we are unwilling to face the discomfort that growth demands.

KEY LESSON

Every time you allow an unfounded fear to make your decisions for you, you risk surrendering an opportunity to grow.

The fears beneath the fear

Failure

“What if I try and it doesn’t work?”

Rejection

“What if they don’t accept me?”

Judgment

“What will people think?”

Change

“What if things become worse?”

Responsibility

“What if I am not capable of handling it?”

Success

“What if people expect more from me?”

In both situations, avoiding fear also means avoiding growth.

DISCUSSION

What do you think people are most afraid of when they try to change their lives?

Courage is not the absence of fear.

One of the biggest misconceptions about courage is that courageous people are never afraid. That is not true.

Courage does not mean your hands never shake, your confidence never wavers, or your mind never imagines the worst possible outcome.

Courage means recognizing the fear and deciding that it will not automatically determine your next move.

The goal is not to eliminate fear.

The goal is to stop treating every fear as a command.

What courage actually looks like

May feel nervous before an important presentation.

They speak anyway.

May fear rejection.

They still make the application.

May be uncertain about the future.

They still take a thoughtful, first step.

May need to admit they were wrong.

They choose honesty over their ego.

Courage is not recklessness.

COURAGE IS NOT

- Ignoring genuine risks.
- Acting without thinking.
- Refusing wise counsel.

REAL COURAGE CAN ALSO MEAN

- Slowing down.
- Asking for help.
- Setting boundaries.
- Walking away from something harmful.

KEY LESSON

You do not have to be fearless to move forward. You have to be willing to act wisely despite fear.

Becoming requires you to leave some things behind.

You cannot build a different future while remaining completely committed to every pattern from your past.

Growth often requires letting go of something familiar.

What might need to be left behind?

The need for everyone's approval.

The habit of making excuses.

The belief that you are not good enough.

The desire to appear perfect.

The comfort of never being challenged.

Relationships or environments that undermine your growth.

The identity you have built around past mistakes.

This is difficult because familiar patterns can feel safe — even when they are limiting us.

Imagine a person who has always been known as shy. They begin to develop their communication skills, speak up in meetings, and share their ideas.

Yet every time they act differently, they feel uncomfortable — because it challenges the identity they have carried for years.

~~"Is this who I have always been?"~~

"Is this who I want to continue becoming?"

KEY LESSON

Sometimes, becoming a new version of yourself requires the courage to stop defending an old version of yourself.

You do not need everyone's permission to grow.

Not everyone will understand your growth. Some may question your decisions. Others may misunderstand your intentions. Some may simply be more comfortable with the version of you they already know.

That does not automatically mean you are making the wrong decision.

You must learn to distinguish between constructive criticism that can help you improve, and the pressure to remain unchanged so other people can remain comfortable.

Listen to wise counsel. Consider feedback honestly. Remain humble enough to correct your mistakes. But do not make universal approval the price of your progress.

Demonstrate it. Don’t just announce it.

Develop your leadership.	→ Develop it.
Become a better speaker.	→ Practice.
Build something meaningful.	→ Take the first step.
Need to apologize?	→ Apologize.
Need to learn a new skill?	→ Become a student again.

KEY LESSON

You can respect people’s opinions without surrendering responsibility for the direction of your life.

Courage grows through practice.

Many people wait to become confident before they act. But confidence often develops through action.

You may not feel confident before your first public speech.

You become more confident by preparing, speaking, learning from feedback, and speaking again.

You may not feel ready to lead.

You begin by taking responsibility, serving others, and learning from your mistakes.

You may not feel capable of changing a long-standing habit.

You start with one decision, repeat it, and build evidence that change is possible.

Think of courage as a muscle. It develops when you exercise it.

Small acts of courage, repeated.

- Speak honestly when silence would be easier.
- Ask a question when you don’t understand.
- Admit a mistake instead of making excuses.
- Begin the task you’ve repeatedly postponed.
- Ask for help when you need it.
- Set a healthy boundary.

Try something that stretches your abilities.

KEY LESSON

Do not wait for courage to appear before you begin. Give courage opportunities to grow through what you do.

Where is fear holding you back?

1. What have I wanted to do for a long time but repeatedly postponed?
2. What am I afraid might happen if I take that step?
3. What is the cost of continuing to avoid it?
4. What is one small, responsible action I can take this week?

Growth begins when we stop pretending fear isn't influencing us and start examining where it is.

You don't have to share every detail with this community. But be honest with yourself.

THE BECOMING QUESTION

What is one thing you would pursue, change, or confront this week if fear were no longer making the decision for you?

Think beyond general statements like "I want to be better" — identify a specific area where courage is needed.

THE COURAGE CHALLENGE

Take one meaningful action you have been postponing because of fear.

- Make the phone call you've been avoiding.
- Apply for the opportunity you've been considering.
- Practice speaking in front of others.
- Start the project you keep postponing.
- Have a necessary, respectful conversation.
- Ask for feedback or help.
- Take the first step toward a new skill.

"This week, I will _____ by _____."

Become anyway.

Your life will not change simply because you have discovered what needs to change.

It changes when you begin making different decisions.

You may still feel afraid tomorrow. You may still have doubts next week. You may still wonder whether you are good enough, whether you are ready, or whether things will work out as you hope.

But you do not have to wait for every doubt to disappear before taking your next responsible step.

- Have the courage to learn.
- Have the courage to admit when you are wrong.
- Have the courage to stand for what is right, even when unpopular.
- Have the courage to begin.
- Have the courage to leave behind what no longer serves your growth.
- Have the courage to keep improving, even when nobody is watching.

Becoming is not a single moment of transformation.

It is a series of decisions, made consistently.

Do not merely talk about the person you want to become.

Take one step toward becoming that person.

BECOMING REQUIRES COURAGE.

AND YOUR NEXT STEP IS AN OPPORTUNITY TO PRACTICE IT.

WEEK THREE TAKEAWAY

Fear may be present,
but it does not have to be in charge.

Growth begins when awareness becomes a courageous decision, and that decision becomes action.

Thank you for being part of The Becoming.

Keep growing. Keep learning. Keep becoming.

Zero excuses for the work you are capable of doing to become better.

Don’t just live.

BECOME.

Welcome to The Becoming.
